Management of Peri-implantitis

Abstract Peri-implantitis, i.e. inflammation in the peri-implant marginal tissues associated with progressing bone loss, is a major burden in everyday praxis, with a large and increasing number of patients suffering from it. Management of peri-implantitis is often complex, while there is no consensus on the most effective treatment. Current approaches for the management of peri-implantitis consist first of anti-infective (non-surgical) measures, followed in the majority of cases by surgical – resective, regenerative, or combinations thereof – interventions. In some cases, the only solution is to remove the implant; often, the remaining bone defect has to be treated to provide sufficient volume for a new implant.

The current course consists of a combination of:

- a) lectures on prevention, non-surgical and surgical management of peri-implantitis, complemented with several clinical videos
- b) hands-on exercises using special peri-implantitis models and phantom heads:
 - powerdriven and airpolishing devices
 - resective (including implantoplasty), regenerative, and combined treatment approaches
 - soft tissue grafting
 - explantation and guided bone regeneration
